Ansys: US survey says aerospace quality down 30% this year.The comparisons are to an ever more far-flung galaxy that will be visible to the naked eye from Earth in 13 billion years' time. I don't mean to be wittering on about the end of the universe, but if astronomers could time their events to coincide with ours, they would be able to study a key period in the formation of our galaxy. The big question is whether a supermassive black hole is generated at the same time as the rest of the galaxy or some time later. The one in our own Milky Way has a mass equal to 1.4 billion suns, and this is constantly voraciously gobbling up matter that is ejected from the galaxy by the sun's gale-like winds. Supermassive black holes are thought to be the remnants of the big bang, or the birth of the galaxy itself, and they have been seen in the centre of most galaxies. Whether they are the same age as the galaxy is not clear. On the one hand the black hole would need to have formed at some point or another and would probably be older than the galaxy. On the other hand the galactic wind could have driven out the black hole in a fair fight with the stars. Either way, it would be very interesting to discover if a nearby black hole is not only older, but also has a supermassive object at its heart. The authors of the new study, published in the journal Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society, are not sure, though. They say that this is one of the most exciting mysteries in astronomy and they hope that the James Webb Space Telescope, due to be launched in 2018, will shed some light on it. _____ A. C.
