I only reboot when I have to, but when I do, I always make sure to shut down all my services. I do this on a regular basis, and all my software runs just fine after the reboot. I haven't rebooted my systems for a few days, so I decided to check on a couple of my services. The first service I checked on was Windows Defender (because I just installed it) and, to my horror, I noticed that it was still running. I closed out of the application and noticed that it had asked me if I wanted to keep my history, so I clicked to say Yes. I had no idea that Windows Defender kept all my history, and I really didn't want that. I deleted the history I saw in the menu, restarted my system, and double checked my services. I noticed that it was still running, so I closed it. I then checked on my regular services, and I was pretty happy to see that they were all shut down. I restarted my system, and went about my business. I checked a couple more times, and everything was fine. I know that I have not rebooted for a few days because I use the interface at the Windows button, press the Windows key to go to the start menu, and click the Shut down button on my taskbar to shut down. I tried this method just to be sure, and it worked fine. The only reason I was still checking on my services was because I wanted to make sure they did not start back up, because I do not want to start my system up again. If I can just do a log off without rebooting, I will stop rebooting my system altogether. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me.
