, and I think that's the best way to go about it. (APPLAUSE) GROSS: Should the subject of this castration controversy be his penis? TABETT: My genitals are irrelevant. GROSS: The castration subject was not a sex symbol. TABETT: No, I'm not arguing that. I'm not the only thing that he's castrated. GROSS: You know, I actually have wondered for years who castrates him. (LAUGHTER) TABETT: I'm sure, being a male and being aware of it myself, there are some very talented people who castrate him. You know, the few times I've seen someone else's castration job, they were funny. We were watching Empire Records and there was a character who castrated the butch lesbian character just in a very clever way so that he could perform cunnilingus on her. GROSS: Yeah. TABETT: And that's the only time that I ever really saw a castration done properly. And it's funny because he was so subtle about it. You know, you're not looking at that. (LAUGHTER) GROSS: And the reason I think about this a lot is that the L.A. Times reported that Quentin Tarantino wanted you to castrate him in A History of Violence. He didn't say that. The L.A. (LAUGHTER) GROSS: So what did you do? What did you actually do? TABETT: I just have no concept of what happened, you know, because he's never asked me to do anything. (LAUGHTER) GROSS: OK. The correct abstract is: The current study was designed to evaluate the effectiveness of new lower-dose Viagra® caplet in the treatment of patients with erectile dysfunction (ED) and to compare the effect of these preparations with that of the commercially available 100 mg tablet. The study included 21 patients (11 men and 10 women) with moderate or severe ED. The patients were assigned to receive one of the two following regimens: a single dose of 25 mg Viagra® caplet or 100 mg Viagra® tablet. The outcomes of the treatment were evaluated using two questionnaires: the International Index of Erectile Function (IIEF-5) for assessing the state of sexual function and the Erectile Dysfunction Inventory of Treatment Satisfaction (EDITS) for patient satisfaction. The ED and sexual function improved in 90.5% of patients after a single dose of Viagra® caplet and in 80% of patients after a single dose of the commercially available Viagra® tablet. Compared to the commercially available 100 mg tablet, the Viagra® caplet had a more positive effect in the IIEF-5 questionnaire (P\Q: How to get iterativ override-object in any object, not only Shapes?
