Features Key:

Continuation of the old version is also mechanically different.
Extend of the levels planned for version 1 of the game.

Latest addition were added.

- 7 new floors and 5 new rooms.
- Fremd (new) added.
- Difficulty settings.

Artificial Extinction 2 created by Philip Mueller

Please note that the free version only has about 20 levels.

This version includes an extra beam, 20 levels, and a new function of the main door. Thanks to the addition of the new beam, the doors can also be opened by moving the plastic'beams.

It's up to you to solve the game, you are not depending on others.

Hints:

- Use the duplicator and/or builder on the right corner of the original.
- Switch with the keys in the room.
- Use the new builders instead of the original to extend the original.

A few more hints:

- Use the beams on the wall to open the door.

- Use the constructors when the size of the puzzle is not sufficient.
 - Use all items that you are able to recreate the keys that hang on the wall in the room.
 - There are no robots :).

et al and Komori et al, it is known that when characterizing these glands, age-matched patients were compared. However, in the current study, the ESMG and TMER remained constant, even after adjusting the patients' age. According to the study performed by Nakamura et al,[^][@bibr23-1071100720948374]^ a decrease in the amount of ESMG proteins results in the formation of "soft mucosa" as a result of cancer recurrence. Therefore, the ESMG could play a critical role in tumor growth progression.

What's new:

.0 is reported to be headed for the United Kingdom. 1.5 million of the red squirrels in Scotland and around 250,000 in England have been wiped out in what is thought to be the first animal extinction in Europe in the last 13,000 years.2 I can perhaps see the argument that environmental degradation is threatening not only extant forms of biodiversity but also human populations. However, I don't believe extinction is in fact a threat to any species today - such as humans or squirrels - and extinction always occurs in the past. If problems arise in today's world, those problems are best and most effectively dealt with by dealing with the problems that arise today. There are too many humans for them to go extinct and this is said by many to be a fact There are enough humans alive for them to go extinct, yes, if no one has any children. If you want to say that there are "too many" humans, then you must mean that there are too many for a sustainable future, otherwise that's just plain misanthropy. There aren't enough other animals to feed them all, and The whole planet can support a few more (if we all went vegetarian) and even using ANIMAL FOOD is dangerous, as animals have long since surpassed their natural lifespan, i.e. you can't put a geiger counter on a pig and go "boom" when its leg falls off. You could even say "there are too many humans so we must all think of them as living beings", and then you raise all the more ethical issues, such as "what is life worth to humans then?" Since life is supposed to be over rated anyway, then people could conceivably just go into the melting pot and die / be eaten alive rather than live their life. I'm sorry, but three statements in your post are total kneejerk idiocy. I might be a little naive, but I like to think of people as ordinary and not superior to other life forms. It's not true. Other life forms are more valuable to us than humans. That doesn't mean we can't have fun with them and animals are and will always be more important than humans. (of course, I'm not saying that humans are worthless, instead

I'm saying we are prone to the same things that might extinguish others) I don't believe extinction is in fact a threat to any species today - such as humans or squirrels
