December is a busy month in the big city by julie@tangentia.ca (Anneb) on I've always wondered how people manage to juggle their lives in a busy city. Working, going to school, raising children, studying, playing, walking the dog and everything else that goes on. Every day is a busy day in this city. When I finally get to the point where I feel like I'm on the edge of a cliff with nothing but free time for me to explore the city with my kids, and I'm forced to stay at home because I'm working or at school, I feel sooo stressed. I'm always running late, I'm never in time for anything, and I always feel as though I'm in a whirlwind going from place to place. I know what I'm supposed to be doing in the city every day. I do know the correct way to catch the bus, I do know the correct way to take the metro, and I do know the correct way to get through traffic to get to work. It's not always easy, but I manage. However, there is one thing I've always found to be an issue. I've gotten myself used to knowing which bus to catch, which metro station to get off at, and which streets to take. Once I know these things, it's easy. But what if I don't know? What if I miss my bus? What if I miss the metro? What if I miss my street? What if I get lost? What if I get in the wrong taxi? What if I get lost in the wrong part of the city? What if I get all the way to my destination, but I don't find my way home? Some people have a planner that they use every single day. They've planned out everything that they're going to do, and it's easy. I haven't figured out how to get there yet. I don't really want to, because a planner
