The right to affordable housing If I had an extra $10 trillion I would buy every abandoned building in Sydney. I'd then use these buildings to create affordable, safe and attractive homes for young and old residents to live. What a great idea. Wouldn't it be wonderful if I bought every house in every suburb in Sydney and then I would start renovating them. I would then ask all the current homeowners in the suburb to move into these renovated homes and they would receive cheap rent. Sounds great doesn't it? It's exactly what the Rudd government has done. However, it has gone too far. Rudd has decreed that those who own their home should have to give it up and sell it to the government or be made homeless by the government. He has provided help to those whose property values drop because of the housing boom of the past few years but not for those whose property values rise as a result of the previous boom. It is not unreasonable to expect a just society to offer assistance to those who have lost their house. This is considered traditional welfare. But the Rudd government is offering traditional welfare to people who should be paying their debt to society. The other day I was reading a newspaper article that highlighted some of the difficulties that Sydney residents were encountering as they tried to apply for homes from the government. As far as I could see, these were the only people who were eligible. So, according to the authorities, those who were not eligible – say people who had a negative equity – were not eligible. So, if you have a negative equity position in your house you are not eligible. However, this is not the only group of people who are not eligible for a government property subsidy. Homeowners who have paid extra in order to upgrade their property to a higher standard are not eligible. Moreover, if you are a business owner and the value of your property has increased by the government's definition you are not eligible. I am not sure when this great boom started for business owners but when it started it was not in Sydney. In fact, according to data sourced from the Reserve Bank of Australia, the price of business capital gains has barely been above the rate of inflation. Let us be clear about one thing. The government is not paying any money to business owners for the increase in the value of their property. It is not paying any money to those people who have underpaid on their mortgage. It is not paying anything to people whose house has increased in

Finals Singles Gail Lewis defeated Betty Stöve 7–6(7–4), 5–7, 6–1 Doubles Virginia Ruzici / Betty Stöve defeated Françoise Dürr / Rosie Casals 2–6, 6–4, 7–6 References Virginia Slims of Honolulu Category:1977 in HawaiiQ: Why is it counter-intuitive to use a singleton for singletons? I always thought of singletons as anything in a singleton class is not shared. This makes using singletons to encapsulate singletons very counter-intuitive. Is it that common to use singletons for singletons because singletons can then give out access to all instances in a single class and thus this counter-intuitive? A: The issue with singletons is not that you could have shared instances. The problem is that there is nothing that ensures that the instances are shared between all threads. If they are not shared, then this is not a singleton anymore. A class which is a singletons at instantiation can still be a singleton at use, but you need to ensure that the instances are thread safe. This is usually done by putting the getter-function into a synchronized block, which can be done at instantiation, or you could make the instance a class-variable. Censorship isn't a digital power In this highly politicized atmosphere, people are going to have a wide range of opinions on the Internet. Comments will be censored because people don't like somebody's comment or a specific topic. You might say, "that's censorship." I say, "No, it's not," because if you talk about censorship, you are talking about the power to censor. Censorship isn't a digital power. For example, if
