Emulator Sega Saturn version 0.Church of St. John the Evangelist, Cirencester is an Anglican parish church in the centre of the market town of Cirencester in the English county of Gloucestershire. The church is built of Roman brick and flint and has a limestone chancel with a cross finial. It was restored in 1889. History There are small sections of wall at the nave entrance that date from the 12th century and are the only part of the present building that is older than 1393. In the late eleventh century Cirencester was a part of the Archdeaconry of Glastonbury, with the church of St Michael in the High Street, which was, in turn, the mother church of St Mary the Virgin and St John, Cirencester, and the Church of St Gregory and St Michael the Archangel. The list of incumbent clergymen at the time of the Domesday Book of 1086 shows that the church had only a rector and a vicar. The church was granted the right to hold fairs in 1261 and again in 1394. Features The plan of the church is a "classic York-Lambeth quadrangle" with a single nave of four bays with a clerestory and aisles, a chancel and a small square tower at the west end. The interior of the church has been designated as a grade 1 listed building. The tower is octagonal, at across it, has a battlemented parapet and one bell in the Gothic style cast by the Sowerby brothers of Cleveleys in 1849. A weathercock is mounted on the gable of the tower, and is alleged to have been brought from the Church of St Michael the Archangel in Llangorse. It dates from the middle of the 19th century but has a plain marble cover. The carving on the font cover is in low relief, and one face bears the figure of Christ in the centre surrounded by a
