Heres Hirosi is also available It is known in the art to use resonators for frequency (RF) filtering as disclosed in the Patent Application No. 2001/0022486A1 to Burcham. The resonator disclosed by m is a high-Q composite resonator, in which a resonator and a dielectric substrate, a ground plane and a central conductor or y structure or feed that can be a hollow tube or a solid wire are fabricated from the same piece of dielectric material such as a c. The resonator disclosed by Burcham further comprises a second unitary structure or shunt that can be a metal plate, a or a strip or meandered structure that is folded around the filter substrate and is also connected to a feed conductor or another ncy selective surface. For many applications such as for example mobile RF communication transceivers and especially eivers for so called 2.45 GHz bands, it is desired to reduce the area of a passive RF device in order to have an active RF device s an amplifier and more communication channels active on a printed circuit board (PCB). In this regard, the device of Burcham bulky if a reduced area is desired since each substrate in the filter of Burcham can be a unitary structure which typically is a tube or a solid dielectric material that is generally larger than a printed circuit board.
