people were injured Monday morning in the massive explosion that occurred when someone armed with a “firearm-like” object tossed a homemade explosive device into a Minnesota mosque and then allegedly attacked another person with a hatchet, according to the FBI.

Authorities said the explosions occurred on a downtown Minneapolis street and at the I-94 and Penn Avenue exit ramp of the Mississippi River bridge in the city’s Bloomington neighborhood. U.S. Attorney Andrew Luger said the FBI was investigating whether the attacks were an act of terrorism.

In a news conference Monday evening in the Minneapolis federal courthouse, he said the FBI was determining whether those in the mosque and other buildings had been targeted.

“We believe there was an attack on the mosque with a firearm-type weapon. We do believe there is a nexus to a hate crime and we’re looking at that right now,” he said.

“We are also looking at a suspect who has been charged, but no indictment is yet out there, but we’re working closely with the state’s attorney’s office in helping with their investigation. 0cc13bf012 clear to many of those involved in this work that this is not yet happening and that without it, transformative change will not occur. “The world cannot become equal until we transform from an economy that produces only what we want to one that produces what we need,” said Brinda Karat, a respected left-wing journalist and political activist. “In such an economy, the needs of the poor are not only different but basic to the future of every society. We can no longer afford to dismiss the poor, or regard them as ‘externalities’, as ‘undesirable’, or ‘irrelevant’.”
