Q: How to get higher values in SQL (or rather PHP)? I have an SQL query for a Job Posting System. I want to know what values are the best, and under which values are the worst, which field. So the big problem here is that the users only have the choice of two values, great or poor. I want to be able to know which value is the best, and the worst. Table name: JobPosting (JobPostingId (Key), PostReview, PostDate, PostDateValue, JobPostingServiceId) So I need a second table to link the best values, and the worst values. so in the jobposting table I'd put the low number, and in the jobPostingBestValues I'd put the high number. so the sum of each row is like this: (2) and the sum of each field is like this (6) I think this is clear enough, but I'd need it for PHP, and I can't find the right words for the question. A: Well you could do it like this: select PostReview, (PostDate -

PostDateValue) as PostSaleTime from JobPosting where PostReview = GREAT group by PostReview, (PostDate - PostDateValue) Or like this: select PostReview, PostDate, PostDateValue, PostDate - PostDateValue as PostSaleTime from JobPosting where PostReview = GREAT

First Signs of Life in Cradle of Life! According to a Reuters article posted July 29, “Scientists found clues in the ancient radioactive rock that the earliest life on Earth was likely to have thrived in marine environments, with a very simple lifestyle.”

The search for life on Mars is on. Via the University of Southern California, scientists have discovered an ancient pool of hydrothermal hot water — a unique combination of warm water and minerals — on Mars. The discovery of such a large volume of hydrothermal hot water - hydrated silica is found in abundance on Mars, hot minerals, and an electrical field — at the site “is one of only a few places on Mars with enough of these unique characteristics to make the discovery possible.” This may be the first glimpse at the earliest stages of the formation of Mars. Our planet is an extreme environment. Earth is exposed to solar radiation and ultraviolet radiation, yet within the planet itself is a primitive ocean, Earth itself is a giant oven. This exposure to the environment means that on Earth life has evolved, now this finding on Mars may tell us that life on Earth and Mars could evolve at the same time. “One of the things that we find fascinating is that life on Earth and Mars probably arose at the same time,” says researcher Professor John Priscu of the University of Montana, who analyzed the samples. “It’
