* www.digital-photography-school.com Photoshop has a solid reputation for being a tool that most people can learn and use, with some hand-holding and point-and-click tutorials to guide them in the right direction. The web site that I recommend above is one of the best resources out there when it comes to figuring out how to use Photoshop. Use this chapter to help you get the most out of Photoshop and begin using your own images in ways you may not have before. ## Keeping Your Images Safe Anytime you send digital images, or allow someone else to do so, you must be aware of the risks of your own actions — both good and bad. Generally, when you let someone else do something to your image, they will decide how to go about it. In most cases, you have no idea what they've done to your image and may not even be aware of it until you receive it. The good news is that you can take measures to keep your images safe and protect your skills.

It allows you to edit RAW photos The first thing you will want to do is to get the best image quality as possible. This means shooting RAW photos or using RAW editing software. What is RAW? RAW stands for “raw digital file format” and it is the first format the sensor captures the data from. RAW files are much larger than TIFFs. RAW files are big-sized files in order to preserve all of the dynamic information. RAW photos are usually smaller than JPEGs and have a better tonal quality. (You can even shoot RAW+JPEG and merge the two and get a good result.) Shooting RAW photos gives you more control over your photo and gives it a better quality. It also gives your RAW editor more flexibility in post-processing. 2. Better editing controls Another main reason to shoot RAW is to use a RAW photo editor. Most RAW editing software gives you better control of the editing process. Some RAW editors also offer simple presets and easy editing tools. It is more convenient to use a RAW editor than a TIFF one (for example Photoshop). 3. You can switch between TIFF and RAW modes You need a camera that is capable of shooting RAW files and they are available on current cameras. You should check your camera manual (if it doesn't say anything, it is not RAW compatible) and see if your camera supports RAW. If it does, you should use it. With RAW mode, you have full control of the exposure, white balance, contrast, highlights, shadows and curves – just about anything you can do. You can shoot your RAW photo in JPEG or TIFF. However, most RAW editors allow you to switch between the two. The only thing you cannot do is to save in RAW from TIFF mode. 4. It is easier to create and edit HDR images Since there is more information in your RAW photo, you can use it to create a high dynamic range image. This is a great way to create amazing HDR photos. HDR stands for high dynamic range. HDR is when you combine multiple exposures that are taken in a controlled way. The advantage is that this method captures more a681f4349e
