Ultrasonographic Findings and Clinical Outcomes of Dogs with Distal Lower Limb Pain: 48 Cases (2005-2018). To report ultrasonographic findings and outcomes in dogs with distal limb pain. Retrospective study of dogs diagnosed with distal lower limb pain. Medical records from 2005 to 2018 of dogs with distal lower limb pain diagnosed by ultrasonography were reviewed. Information extracted included clinical signs, limb fractures, limb measurements, imaging findings, and, if applicable, proposed diagnoses. Thirty-nine limb fractures and 18 normal limbs were included. Affected limbs were significantly wider than normal limbs. Ten dogs had uniform enlargement of the femoral and tibial biceps femoris (n = 8) and semitendinosus (n = 2) muscles. Limb symmetry or tibia-to-stifle angle >120° were suggestive of a normal limb. Tenderness over the area of the semitendinosus bursa was the most common finding. Seventy-one percent of the dogs had normal results on radiographic examination; 25% had equivocal findings; and 4% had positive findings. Treatment included nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, local anti-inflammatory therapy, and limb immobilization. Rechecks were performed in 80% of dogs (8/10) 4 days to 9 weeks (mean, 5 weeks) after initial evaluation. The extent of bone marrow edema (BME) and muscle edema was evaluated in 50 limbs using magnetic resonance imaging. Changes in BME were measured as percent of edema (percent edema). There were no major abnormalities detected on magnetic resonance imaging. Overall, 30% of dogs had complete resolution, 60% had partial resolution, and 10% were stable. The lesions observed in the biceps femoris and semitendinosus muscles did not resolve. The extent of BME was greater for grade III, or complete, BME versus grade II, or partial, BME ($P = 0.06$). Arthritis was not diagnosed in 2 dogs. Two dogs developed osteosarcoma. Distal limb pain in dogs can be suspected based on enlargement of the distal limb muscles and painful joints. Ultrasonographic examination

Elden Ring Features Key:

PRESENTATION (Useful tools that help you play). Useful tools such as time control mode that represent a battle as a simulation game, the world map that allows you to easily visualize the progress of your character, and battle notes that provide the execution accuracy of the battle.
DETAILS (Infinite and vast details of the world). Infinite and vast details, such as diverse illustrations for enemies and allies, individual fight dialogues, and the various weapons and armor of the enemy and ally.
A VAST WORLD (Vast fields in environments). Environments that conjure strong fantasy where exciting battles can occur within the limits of this fantasy setting, such as open fields with a variety of situations.
BUILT IN BATTLE SNDIENCE (Agility, impermanence, and various automata systems that make battles feel realistic). Combat that is so realistic that it lets you get tangled in moving patterns of attack and defense. This is due to the fact that in battles in the game all kinds of conditions can happen that no one has ever experienced before within a fantasy setting.

Feel free to enjoy this online game that encompasses the Lands Between from two points of view.

"I started playing Tarnished Knight as a middle school junior... and so far I've been having a great time. One of the nice touches is that the battles have a certain periodicity with the difference that you get to decide the order of the attacks against your opponents, and it feels pretty flexible too." — Tsuyoshi Yasuda, Japanese media production director of Elden Ring.

"Everyone needs to experience the Lands Between even if it's only a fantasy RPG!" — Sayumi Hirosue, Japanese dubbing actress of Tarnished Knight.
