What's new in Stealth Fighter DEX:

- using Virtual Reality to build a super yacht 03 March 2018 VR is a powerful tool for capturing, processing and storing data and also information that was difficult to capture with conventional technologies. Used wisely, VR can transform the processes in which we operate - advancing an industry from one that is based on physical models to one that is based on virtual models. More and more businesses are looking at ways in which to incorporate VR into their daily operations - be it managing their training programs, employee evaluations, marketing campaigns, etc. However, one sector where it has never really taken root is the super yacht market. The arduous business of designing, building and selling yachts isn't the type of operation that many people can sit at a desk and look after; it's inherently a hands-on, high-stress occupation with every detail carefully considered. Superyachts are intricate blueprints for ultimate living, and any design decision that can be made remotely needs to be done using the latest in design tools. Superyachts are on a time-and-cost-line: the smaller the design, the less time spent on it and the cheaper the end product. Today's cutting edge superyachts can be up to ten times more expensive than the ones from the 1980s, which is why it takes more money to finance them than it does on the racing circuit, where there's more money and better technology to work with. With VR, superyachts can become highly automated superyachts. "Cruising in Virtual Reality", Fast Company Magazine, Nov 2016 But the application of VR in yacht design isn't just an add-on to the design phase; it's about transforming everything - from the creation of materials to the manufacturing processes for those materials. In the Introduction section of the paper, Professor Stewart Brand describes how VR is enabled us to project the future. With the technology advances of the last few years, it's finally possible to turn those projections into a reality. How can we combine the third dimension of time, age, with our two-dimensional experience of time, present. This projection of the future is, of course, based on the assumption that 'progress' will continue, so we can visualize the unthinkable. VR gives us the ability to do precisely that - to 'update' our experiences of the present, so that some of them
