In recent years, in order to meet the increase in frequency of a clock signal and the speeding-up of data transfer, it is necessary to ensure the reliability of an internal circuit with high clock frequency. Therefore, the clock signal generating circuit is developed to be able to generate a clock signal with high frequency. For example, in Japanese Patent Application Laid-open No. 2008-103388 (Patent Document 1), a clock signal generating circuit is described. In this clock signal generating circuit, a plurality of frequency division circuits are cascade-connected and controlled by a clock signal with a predetermined frequency. In this case, a phase of a clock signal which is generated from a first frequency division circuit is delayed by a predetermined time by a second frequency division circuit, and the clock signal is outputted. Accordingly, by controlling the plurality of frequency division circuits by a clock signal with a predetermined frequency, the clock signal with high frequency is obtained. In addition, in Japanese Patent Application Laid-open No. 2008-103388 (Patent Document 1), a clock signal generating circuit is described. In this clock signal generating circuit, a frequency division circuit is configured by cascading a plurality of inverters, and a division ratio is controlled by a clock signal with a predetermined frequency.
