I'm creating an application that uses a database. During that process I load a PDF to my application. I want that PDF to be accessible in all controls of my application while it's loading. I thought loading the PDF in a timer, and that's working fine, but I would like to change the way it is done. Application.Run(new Form1()); This code can't be changed by me since it's part of the application. I was told to use the Application.LoadPDF() function but I can't figure it out. PS: I don't have a copy to post my code, but I'm really trying to understand what you might need to see. A: You need to instantiate an event to open the PDF so that you can reopen it when it is loaded. Create a button that will open the PDF. In your event to open the PDF, check to see if the pdf file is open. If so, close the pdf and reopen it else, close it and load the pdf. Button OpenButton; void OpenFile(object sender, EventArgs e) { if (IsPDFOpened()) { CloseCurrentDocument(); } else { LoadPDF(); OpenCurrentDocument(); } } A: You can use Application.LoadPDF method to load a file, but you cannot access any UI elements, buttons, etc. during the file loading. However, the process will not affect anything in your application. So, you can use it as your last resort to a display a window and wait for the PDF loading to be done, or you can use your Timer, which is also a last resort to something like this. Tools BIOS 2.1: The new BIOS will not be flashed to the SSD, but SSDs will be compatible with both 0cc13bf012
