This is a side effect of the lack of schools, social policies for women, and social security. Without a home to go to, the desire to work disappears for children, and the men, especially those from rural areas, have no motivation to work. Without a dream, there is no sense of hope, and the government has no vision for the future. There are those who claim that Japan is behind in economic development and that we must catch up with the west. However, this does not mean we are behind in technical knowledge, industrial capacity, manufacturing, or science and technology. The Japanese people have the highest per-capita GDP in the world, and it is very high even compared to other developed countries. The OECD has ranked Japan number 1 for eleven consecutive years. Based on the OECD per-capita GDP, Japan is the second highest for the world. Our per-capita GDP is higher than all OECD nations except for the United States, and our expenditure on health and education is higher than any OECD nation. Even though Japan's economy shrank during the 1980s and 1990s, the

OECD has never once ranked Japan as one of the twenty most unequal countries for income distribution
