The story of Brigade E5 is set in a small tropical country on the brink of civil war. It is a time when political unrest, religious cults, threats of secession and terrorism and even military action threaten to make the country fall apart. A much-feared colossus, Deermann Badger, has been threatening the security of the Union, but many citizens don't want to involve themselves. Instead, they hire a group of mercenaries from around the world, asking them to make the big Boss pay his debts. Brigade E5 invites you to participate in the action and take on the role of General Macario Miranda, commander of a brigade made up of seasoned veterans and ruthless mercenaries. Your mission is to take care of the Badger and his band of thugs before they destroy the whole country. Features of Brigade E5: This is a tactical game that places the players in the world of inimitable Brigade E5. Endless gameplay variety: Unique enemy behavior and tactics will provide the players with an unparalleled variety of gameplay in such scenarios. Game flow based on the principles of strategy: Realistic game mechanics for individual actions: Attack, move, hide... or use a supportive role? Execute necessary special orders, play the role of the commander. Your troops will follow your orders, which will also be carried out automatically on the enemy's side. This page displays all Screenshots for the game Escape from the Office.Q: Trouble with populating Google Calendar My goal is to create a single-page app to import events from a database and push them into a Google Calendar. I've written most of the app, but when I go to push the data into Google, I am encountering problems. The basic outline of what I'm doing is as follows: PHP requests (via AJAX) a list of events from the database Each event is stored as a data object in an array and sent back to the AJAX call OnSuccess of the AJAX call, the PHP script inserts the events into the database The list of events is then sent back to the client via AJAX OnSuccess of the AJAX call, the PHP script pushes the events into a Google Calendar The problem is that at step 4, when it comes time to push the events into the Google Calendar, I get an error that says "There was a problem while pushing events." The only way I can get it to work is to have two requests, one to get the list of events (which is working) and another to push them (which isn't working). Here's the code: In the PHP script: $cal = new Google_CalendarService($creds); $data = json_decode(file_get_contents('php://input'), true); if($data == null) { echo "You must include your Google calendar API credentials"; exit; } $cal->events->insert($data); print_r($cal->events->getList()); $cal->close(); In the JavaScript: function populateCalendar(data) { var url = ""; $.ajax({ url: url, data: { events: data }, type: "POST", success: function (response) { if(response!= null) {

What's new in Spider-Man: Homecoming - Virtual Reality Experience:

InductVR is a virtual reality company that creates tools for industry. We develop innovative artificial intelligence pipelines for visual processing, rendering, texturing, rendering, and tracking. Feb 3 Read & Respond What is the development process like and how is it divided between different software engineers? Like I said in my previous blog post, there is no straightforward, standard process that you follow. However, what we do have is a shared understanding among the team that the goal is to reach a satisfactory solution. Part of this is the development model we use. Every developer has a certain area of influence and responsibility. The part of the development process typically starts with analyzing the questions asked in our support forum. Sometimes, it is the development team that is asked to resolve a specific problem. There is usually a preliminary conversation to narrow down the scope of the problem. Additionally, developers are often asked to provide implementation or debug hints which are followed up by the support team. Once the problem is identified and we pinpoint the functionality that needs to be implemented, we have to decide whether we want to write the code by ourselves or whether we want to use a library. Of course, we want to use third-party libraries whenever possible. The next important part of the process is testing. Most of the time, we use Cucumber for the tests. Cucumber allows us to write test cases in a simplified model. We use the test-runner library to run these test cases in a JUnit-like environment. Since our system is heavily focused on visual-based products, we opted for the JUnitX library for its flexibility and performance. We also have several different strategies for implementing features. The first thing is before the feature is implemented, we want to look at the current features/functionality and how they could or should be improved. This often happens in a refactoring process. We usually start by taking the problem to a user in a customer feedback session. After the user has provided their idea, one of our engineers takes it into our system. We have a complex workflow in place to map an idea into an actual feature request. We know the product quite well, so when we encounter a specific user problem, we understand exactly how we can help. Sometimes, the feature request comes with a rough sketch or just an image. If that's the case, we first proceed to implement the idea, but at some point we start to implement the design ideas and then

You play as monsters who can go to the earth, but only if your land has a lot of gold. Increase their abilities, attack power, production power, movement speed and many other factors, allowing to fight the real monsters on the earth. Link: Steam Store Page published:24 Feb 2017 Continent of Go'Shi, where after a series of meteorites fell from the sky, an endless war between various races began. The former inhabitants of this continent are infected and become something new and have gone far beyond their races. Take control of one of the races and fight in an endless struggle! FEATURES Multiplayer strategy in 1x1 mode; Variation of abilities creatures depending on the selected elements during the game; Regular content and balance updates;REVIEW In ElementalsFight, players are divided into two equal teams on opposite sides of the map. The goal of each player is to build as many buildings as possible and produce the creatures and defend their base. Under the control of the players there is a hero who can both build buildings and buy items with unique elements, which improves player creatures and hero`s abilities. Whose hero survives, he won.GAMEPLAY ElementalsFight combines both the Tower Defense genre and the MOBA, only instead of towers, players place buildings that produce creatures that go to another team. You will not be able to move buildings and their place for construction is limited, so think about their location in advance. Your creatures will walk, attack, use abilities - automatically! After killing enemy creatures, you will receive gold, which you can spend on buying new buildings or items for the hero. Defend your hero at any cost, but if the opponents entered your base, but do not find the hero, they will begin to capture the base, which will lead to their victory. Wanting to do legal research Many years ago when I was an undergrad, I started teaching myself law with the late and very wise Judge Arlene Boehmer - who had herself had that experience reading a novel, 'Tess of the D'Urbervilles' by Thomas Hardy. I was a brand new lawyer and adored the lovely Judge Boehmer. I loved teaching 'Tess,', not because of the similarity to my own life story, but because she becomes a lawyer because she is nuts. I just loved the character's anyway. Anyway, once I knew somewhat what my first

System Requirements:

To run the game, your computer must have at least 1GB of RAM, 100MB of available hard drive space, and a 1024x768 display. No video card is needed for multiplayer mode. You will also need a reasonably-sized USB port. Installing the mod is easy. Just download the ZIP file and extract it, then run it. The game will ask you for the DLC map to download. When that's done, start the game. To play with an untextured map, you can download the map pack here: (
