This game is for you if you like Bestiary, postmodern necrology, short captioned videos, memes, sarcastic mockery and automatic humor. 1. Find the best example of the logo, WordArt, art or image. 2. Change the logo for a new meme of the game. 3. He's Your King, Your Queen - write a caption and captions for the picture for which you chose the original, or make a photo with your friends. 4.

Everyone on the planet plays the game - Diggman is happy... Give your favorite picture or description a title. You are the king. 5. Your friends are your king and queen. Do not choose your "daughter" from other planets or cities - this game is for guys. 6. But you may combine it with game on Facebook, Twitter and VK. Game description Bitardia is such a game that you can play at home, and during your night in the bedroom. The game is easy to learn and hard to master. I'll describe below how I play. The rules The rules are simple. 1. Each action has two stages. 1a. You choose which stage to play and click on the small star. 1b. After the action, you'll notice whether the action succeeded or not. 2. There is a special action which is played during one click - Glick. 3. Players play on a board made in Flash. You can play directly on the site or you can download the game. The file is about 50 MB. Gameplay instructions The game is presented in the form of a board. On each square, you can place a picture of your favorite meme or place a label. You can exchange your cards by clicking. On each player moves, a series of squares are produced, allowing you to play the Glick option or click another card. The normal actions are clicking on the appropriate spot on the grid or double clicking on the labels. Double and multiple clicks can be played simultaneously - the number of actions depends on the player's speed and the size of the board. If the number of squares is equal to the number of actions, the player gets a 5 and continues to play. The first player to get to the end of the board wins. The slow player will only be 3. The speed of the player depends on whether you need to think about how to play the next move. The speed is determined by the number

Arkham Horror: Mother's Embrace is a campaign module for the Arkham Horror boardgame by Fantasy Flight Games, released in 2001. Setting Arkham Horror: Mother's Embrace is a campaign module consisting of the well-traveled group of characters (no longer a party as in other games) exploring the vast and cavernous forest surrounding Arkham. Story The forest is populated by legendary and monstrous creatures, the ghosts of the dank and unwholesome forest. The forest is the home of the glorious spirits of the trees themselves: the inhabitants of the forest are essentially ghosts. The forest is also the home of succubi, which exists beyond the boundaries of reality. Mother Deep is one of the most powerful succubus available. A figure akin to a mother, she roams the forest and occasionally calls upon characters for information. Gameplay Arkham Horror: Mother's Embrace contains rules for a starting point for a campaign, and also activities to bring well-traveled characters (which can be seen as a party of any number of players, but is not)(no longer as in other games but like in later Cataclysm Coop and Curse of the Crimson Crown) into the gameplay of the module. The starting point is played in two different and significant ways. The first is the Place of Change system. In this system, the party moves deeper and deeper into the forest. These new locations are chosen randomly throughout the adventure, presenting the players with some colorful new locations in which to visit their mysterious guides. The second form is the Interaction between Places system, where the party has to search, or rather, "interact" with various strange and dangerous things. For example, one of the locations the party may visit is called the Well of Souls, inside which there are hot springs used for cleansing, but must be visited on two separate nights. Almost every location has a lengthy series of 10 questions that the players must answer correctly to gain their next turn of exploration in the forest and if they succeed, this tends to cast more suspicion over the one who succeeded than the one who failed. Most of them seem, at first glance, to be relatively simple questions, but it is easy to get locked out of a future step of the adventure. Unlike most earlier module rules, Mother's Embrace includes the Possibility Meter, an item that alters the room or dungeon that the party is in. There are three different kinds: a Danger Meter, a Location Meter
