Clerks of the American Foreign Relations Committee, 1888-1904: Selected Papers. In the four years since the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, U.S. intelligence agencies have dramatically improved their ability to investigate and disrupt terrorist plots, a Times review of government reports shows. The purpose of the review is to inform Congress about the effectiveness of the government's efforts to combat terrorism. The report, which President Obama released last week, describes how the terrorist threat facing the United States has changed, and what the agencies have been able to do to protect Americans from those threats. The Department of Justice, National Security Agency and FBI were able to detect and prevent 83 planned terrorist attacks before 9/11 and 350 planned attacks after 9/11, according to the report. In the first four years, the agencies were able to prevent more than a third of the planned terror attacks, according to the report, by intercepting communications, obtaining secret warrants, gathering valuable information from informants, identifying vulnerabilities in the security systems and disrupting terrorist plots. The overall number of terror attacks in the United States declined in the years after 9/11, according to the report. While the report documents the progress of the agencies in tracking and thwarting terrorist plots, it does not discuss the damage that 9/11 inflicted on the United States. You know that mega project with the massive budget? It's going to the movies. Sources close to the project tell The Hollywood Reporter that Aaron Sorkin's long-gestating film adaptation of the HBO drama The Newsroom is ramping up to shoot this summer. HBO is the studio partner, with the producers financing through Summit Entertainment and Universal Pictures. Producer Scott Rudin and Sorkin executive produce. The Newsroom has been in development since 2009 when it was first reported on by the trades. No director has been set, and Sorkin's involvement was one of the reasons for the film's long gestation. Variety reported last month that Robert Redford was in talks to direct, but there has been no report on that front since. Aaron Sorkin's HBO drama The Newsroom: Sources Close to the Film The film, according to insiders, will be a three-hour movie that will take place in a year where the president is on the brink of impeachment and the country is divided. The film will cover the period following the events of last fall ♦
