Oxidant-responsive element-binding protein (OREBP) is a transcription factor that regulates cell survival and growth by forming a heterodimer with small Maf proteins. Recent studies show that OREBP is also involved in the regulation of expression of genes responsive to oxidative stress. In this study, we identified a novel OREBP target gene, OX-2, by using a search program of human cDNA microarray database. OX-2 cDNA contains a putative signal peptide, and transfection of OX-2 suppressed the expression of glutathione S-transferase (GST) mRNAs in TCDD- and AAPH-treated Hepa-1 cells. Moreover, GST activities in the cytosol were significantly decreased following treatment of Hepa-1 cells with anti-OX-2 antibody. Promoter activity analysis revealed the presence of two antioxidant-response elements within the promoter sequence of OX-2. The binding of OX-2 protein to these elements was confirmed by gel mobility shift assay and supershift assay. In addition, overexpression of OX-2 in Hepa-1 cells enhanced the expression of GST alpha and mRNAs, but not GST mu, suggesting that OX-2 is a novel Nrf2 target gene. These results 6d1f23a050
