processname: gerrit.Predicting hospitalisation for respiratory conditions in children attending primary care in the United Kingdom: the case for hospital-based services. To examine the validity of hospital admissions as a proxy measure of children's respiratory health, we examined their association with children's doctor-diagnosed respiratory conditions. Administrative data were obtained for children (1-15 years) registered with general practices in England and Wales from 1998 through 2004. Hospital admissions were recorded during 1998 to 2003 and were assessed against an algorithm developed using the outcome of doctor-diagnosed respiratory conditions during the 12-month follow-up period. In primary care, chronic diseases may influence hospital admission rates; hence, this study analysed only emergency hospitalisations and only children with 1 or more emergency visits. A total of 1,624,345 children's records were analysed. Acute bronchitis/bronchiolitis (15%), the commonest doctor-diagnosed respiratory conditions, was associated with increased hospitalisation rates in un
