

The table shows the ideal part ratio, the ordinary part ratio and the difference. Some engine categories are configured differently. The mazda3 engine has a larger cylinder volume and a lower compression rate than the mazda6 engine, and thus the mazda3 engine has a higher compression temperature than the mazda6 engine. The mazda3 has a 2 valve heads that operate with a water-in-oil injector while the mazda6 has a 4 valve head that operates with a water-in-water dual fuel injector. The mazda3 engine is very air sensitive and can experience detonation. The comparison of the mazda3 engine to its twin the mazda6 engine did not show that the mazda6 engine had a better performance than the mazda3 engine. The mazda3 engine has a much larger advantage with the mazda3 having a higher power-to-weight ratio and a higher compression rate than the mazda6 engine. The mazda3 engine has a better torque curve with a more linear curve than the mazda6 engine. Torque on demand could be more effectively used on the mazda6 with its enlarged cam profiles with the mazda3 having a less aggressive cam profile than the mazda6. The mazda3 has a much more powerful torque peak than the mazda6. The mazda3 was not upgraded to a mazda6 level of performance with all of the mazda3 models not having a mazda6 level of performance. The mazda3 has a more powerful brake thermal rating and a more powerful stop thermal rating than the mazda6. The mazda3 brake pad and disc brake sizes are much more substantial than the mazda6. The mazda3 braking system was not upgraded to a mazda6 level of braking system capability. The mazda3 engine has an air filter that is not removable while the mazda6 engine is a real hood unit. Although the mazda3 engine has a lower oil capacity than the mazda6 engine, the mazda6 engine has a lower oil filter life. The mazda3 engine has a cold engine oil light and a hot engine oil light while the mazda6 does not. While the mazda3 engine has a higher fuel pump than the mazda6 engine, the mazda6 engine
