Cathepsin B or L: differential penetration of fibronectin into the cell interior and modulation of cell spreading. The roles of cathepsin B and L were examined in the penetration of fibronectin (FN) into the cells. Plasmids encoding for wild-type cathepsin B or L were introduced into HeLa cells by lipofection, and cell-surface expression of each cathepsin was confirmed by flow cytometry. HeLa cells transfected with the wild-type and mutant cathepsins were incubated on a patterned surface of immobilized FN. Immunofluorescence microscopy showed that cathepsin L penetrated FN into the cells more efficiently than did cathepsin B. Wild-type and mutant cathepsins differentially affected cell spreading. HeLa cells with cathepsin L spread, but those with cathepsin B did not spread. These results indicate that the cell-surface-expressed cathepsin L mediates the internalization of FN./* * Licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0 (the "License"); * you may not use this
